

Camara P. Jones, M.D., M.P.H., Ph.D.

Camara P. Jones, M.D., M.P.H., Ph.D. is Research Director on Social Determinants of Health at the National Center for Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention

Dr. Jones received an M.D. degree from Stanford University (1981), completed residencies in General Preventive Medicine (Johns Hopkins School of Hygiene and Public Health) and Family Medicine (Residency Program in Social Medicine, Montefiore Hospital), and earned a masters degree in public health and a doctoral degree in epidemiology at Johns Hopkins, finishing in 1995. She has received numerous awards, most recently spent nine months in New Zealand as an Ian Axford Fellow in Public Policy. She has held numerous leadership and advisory positions, including several in the American Public Health Association, and has served as President of the Society for Analysis of African-American Public Health Issues since 1997. She is also a member of the Board of Directors of the American College of Epidemiology

Felicia Schanche Hodge, Dr.P.H.

Felicia Schanche Hodge, Dr.P.H. is a Professor in the University of Minnesota School of Nursing and Director of the CAIRE - Center for American Indian Research and Education, which she created at the University of California at Berkeley. A Wailaki Indian from Northern California, Dr. Hodge is an alumna of the School of Public Health, UC Berkeley, where she later taught in the School of Social Welfare and Native American Studies. She has over 25 years' experience working in health delivery systems on reservations and in urban settings.